Advantage of the Hudson to New York. "Reasoning Out a Metropolis" is the title of an article on the Greater New York written by Ernest Ingersoll for St. Nicholas. In speaking of the growth of cities during the early part of the century Mr. Ingersoll says:

How could New York double its population in 15 years and beat its great rival Philadelphia when the latter was surrounded by a far wider belt of rich farms and populous towns?

It was due primarily to the fact that Robert Fulton brought here his steamboat and that New York men knew how to take advantage of the invention. Philadelphia also had the steamboat, you will reply. Yes, but she did not have the Hudson river.

The Hudson had from the first been an advantage to New York because it afforded a highway for 150 miles inland and thus had greatly aided in the early settlement of the interior of the state and of western New England. By the improvement of the steamboat river travel at once became so cheap and speedy that the country dealers and the farmers themselves could go straight down to New York to buy goods or do their shopping at first hand. This brought a great deal of new business, both wholesale and retail, to New York, some of which was taken away from its rival cities.

Moreover, the steamboats and towboats lessened the cost of bringing building materials, grain, hay, meat and all the country grown food found in city markets and therefore lessened the expense and increased the comfort of living and working here.

Wouldn't Be "Half Hanged."

It was once the custom in several southern states, when a man under sentence of the law was hanged and three times in succession broke the rope and fell to the earth before the sentence could be carried out, to liberate him and thereafter to account him innocent of the crime of which he was convicted.

An old dandy past the threescore and ten years generally allotted to man had a neighbor whom he considered a "hoodoo," a "Jonah." One day he went over to his neighbor's house and killed him with a shotgun. He was tried, convicted and sentenced to death. The day of the execution arrived, and a great crowd assembled to see the old man hanged. He was a very heavy man, and when the noose had been placed around his neck and the barrel drawn from under him his weight broke the rope and he fell to the ground.

The second time and the third time the rope broke, and then his friends demanded that he be released. The sheriff turned him over to his friends, who made a great show of welcome. But he broke away from them, and, hurrying to the sheriff, who was about to leave the scene, he astonished him by saying, "Hold on, Massa Sheriff! Hold on! Put that rope around this old nigger's neck again. D'y'you think I'm going to have all do folks pointin' me out as a half bung man? No, sah. Try it again! Try it again!"

The sheriff did try it again, and this time the rope did not break.—New York Sun.

Stopping the Interest.

Daniel Webster once dined with an old Boston merchant, and when they came to the wine a dusty old bottle was carefully decanted by the servant and passed to the host. Taking the bottle, he filled Webster's glass and handed it to him. Then, pouring out another for himself, he held it to the light and said: "How do you like it, Mr. Webster?"

"I think it is a fine specimen of old port."

"Now, can you guess what it cost me?" asked the host.

"Surely not," said Webster. "I only know that it is excellent."

"Well, now, I can tell you, for I made a careful estimate the other day. When I add the interest to the first price, I find that it cost me the sum of just 5 shillings per glass."

"Good gracious! You don't say so?" cried Webster. And then, draining his glass, he presented it again, with the remark:

"Fill it up again as quick as you can, for I want to stop that confounded interest!"—Nuggets.

Valuable Pottery.

An interesting story is told of Lady Helen de Hangest-Genlis, who started a small pottery on her estate, chateau d'Oiron, about 1524. In this factory was made the famous Faience d'Oiron. She was a widow, cultured and very artistic. A collection of her crayon portraits is said to have been preserved, but it was in the manufacture of china that she made a name for herself. Not more than 50 pieces of Faience d'Oiron are now known to be in existence. All of them are small, but of surpassing beauty. They are supposed to have been made as gifts for friends. They have an inlaid ornament of interlacing bands or scrolls, arabesques and geometrical forms of tinted clays, yellow and brown, relieved with soft colors on a cream white ground, forming a smooth surface and covered with a soft glaze.—Art Amateur.

The Letter G.

The letter G furnishes us a curious bit of orientalism. Its Hebrew name is gimel, camel, from the resemblance of the Hebrew character to the head and neck of that animal. The character was thus almost certainly derived from a picture of that animal, which, reduced to a hieroglyphic and then simplified, still distinctly indicates the shape of the head and neck of the beast of burden familiar to every dweller in eastern lands.

The crosses on the English royal crowns were introduced by Richard III during his short and turbulent reign. The arches of the diadem were added by Henry VII in 1485.

The shield of Hector, when slung at the back in walking, covered the body from neck to heel.

A Desperate Woman.

Experts in insanity tell us that when anyone goes insane, frequently their whole nature is reversed. They do and say exactly the opposite things to what they would do in their sane mind.

A mother whose mind breaks down under extreme nervous tension may turn upon the one object in all the world most precious to her—her baby.

The terrible nervous tension under which many women live and suffer because of some weakness or disease of their sex keeps them on the very verge of insanity.

The constant drag and drain upon the complicated and delicate organism affects the whole nervous system and works upon the brain with an almost irresistible madness.

Thousands of suffering women have been literally saved from the insane asylum by the timely influence of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is the one perfect and positive specific for every derangement of woman's special organism.

It is a scientific and permanent cure for those severe, chronic, complicated cases which doctors usually consider hopeless. It is the only medicine of its kind devised by an educated and skilled physician.

Mrs. Sarah E. Reins, of Dayton, Cass Co., Mo., in a letter to Dr. Pierce, writes: "It was in the winter of 1890 that my sufferings commenced. It was close to my time of confinement. I took the grip, and that with the labor pains all went to my head. I suffered dreadfully, and when I gave birth to my little boy I kept getting worse. I doctored but nothing did me any good. I had nervous spasms and was delirious. Oh, no tongue can express my sufferings. I was advised by a lady to try your medicine and I did. I got one bottle of the 'Favorite Prescription' and one of the 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I had taken two-thirds of the medicine when it commenced its work. I began to feel better, and still continued getting better. In a short time I felt like another woman. I gained strength and flesh, and am now forty years of age. This is true, and it was your medicine that saved my life."

Dr. Pierce's 100-page illustrated book, "The People's Medical Adviser," sent, paper bound, free for the cost of mailing only, 21 one-cent stamps, or, cloth-bound at stamps. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

The Royal Reign of Velvet.

Velvet in all colors is immensely popular this winter and is used in every conceivable way and in all sorts of garments. Young and old wear it with equal propriety, and the evening gown of velvet, which has heretofore been relegated to the wardrobe of the matronly woman, finds special favor with young women.

Black velvet gowns are made elegant with jet passementerie, and old point lace is brought out on the waist. Some of the skirts are perfectly plain, while others are profusely trimmed with jets, black silk embroidery or chiffon ruffles. But in every instance at least an attempt at a train must be seen.—Woman's Home Companion.

Maybe He Would Look Scared.

When a girl likes a man, she amuses herself by wondering how he would look if she should suddenly put her hands on his shoulders and say, "Now, I am going to kiss you," in a cool, authoritative tone.—New York Press.

The Newspaper Bogy.

E. L. Godkin in The Atlantic claims that the advertiser, rather than the subscriber, is now the newspaper bogy.

He is the person before whom the publisher cowers and tries to please, and the advertiser is very indifferent about the opinions of a newspaper. What interests him is the amount or quality of its circulation. What he wants to know is how many people see it, not how many people agree with it.

The consequence is that the newspapers of largest circulation, published in the great centers of population where most votes are cast, are less and less organs of opinion, especially in America. In fact, in some cases the advertisers use their influence, which is great and which the increasing competition between newspapers makes all the greater, to prevent the expression in newspapers of what is probably the prevailing local view of men or events. There are not many newspapers which can afford to defy a large advertiser.

How It Felt.

A worthy old gentleman who had never wandered far from his native township before went to Boston one day in response to an invitation to visit a relative.

The Bostonian, in showing his friend about town, took him to the top of a tall office building. They took a look at the marvelous landscape spread out before them and prepared to descend. They entered the elevator. It began its swift journey downward.

"Don't be frightened, Uncle Silas," said the younger man, as his visitor grasped his arm, shut his eyes and held on for life. "There is no danger."

"I wasn't afraid, George," gasped Uncle Silas, after they had stepped out of the elevator, "but I—I left my stomach up there."—Youth's Companion.

Disconcerting.

Mrs. Manycooks (severely)—Didn't I hear a man talking loudly with you in the kitchen just now, Mary?

Mary (complacently)—Oh, hope so, ma'am, for this 'O can call yez as a witness in a case as brach as promise suit, ma'am.—Brooklyn Eagle.

PROTESTATIONS OF FRIENDSHIP, BUT A DAGGER UNDER THEIR CLOAKS.

The successor to Senor De Lome, the deposed Spanish Minister, was officially presented to President McKinley on last Saturday. The usual display of tinsel and gold lace was an impressive feature of the occasion. The reception took place in the Blue Room of the White House, the decorations being elaborate and appropriate.

Secretary Sherman performed the ceremony of presenting the new Spanish Minister, with the high sounding name of Senor Louis Pailo y Bernabe. The exchange of greetings was cordial and the formal addresses were made, the Spanish Minister expressing the most friendly feeling and well wishes from his government to the President and government of the United States. President McKinley replied in similar terms and the ceremony was over.

Almost simultaneously with this formal introduction and expression of sincere friendship on the part of Spain for the government of the United States, a leading Spanish paper in Madrid, the Imparcial, says: "If our flag goes into mourning, let us at least be able to put some pieces of crepe on the American's obnoxious flag." Senor Moret, a prominent Spanish leader, at a banquet of the Grand Cross of Carlos III being conferred on a Governor of a Province, concluded a fiery speech with these words: "Should the necessity arise we will call upon the sons of Spain, that they may rally in the road of duty and show all foreigners that they are not strong enough to usurp our rights."

Taking these together with the expressions of Weyler, the butcher, and his late acts against this government, it looks very much as if the protestations of friendship of the Spaniards, through their new Minister for the United States, are either a misrepresentation of the feelings of the people or a continuation of the treachery that wrecked the battleship Maine.

FIENDISH IF TRUE.

The Army and Navy Register, whose editorial articles are supposed to be inspired by those high in authority, announces that the President has been semi-officially informed by members of the Court of Inquiry that the warship Maine was destroyed by a submarine mine planted in Havana harbor by the Spanish Government and deliberately exploded. More than this, it appears that the Maine was purposely moored by a Spanish pilot in the vicinity of the mine, and that the explosion occurred at a moment when the ship had been opportunistically carried by wind and tide directly over the mine.

If this assertion is verified by the findings of the Court of Inquiry, war is almost inevitable, no amount of indemnity can make amends for the offense. The crime is unpardonable and a government that is responsible for the atrocity should not be permitted to exist. The lives of 258 men were sacrificed and the vessel of a friendly nation, in fact too friendly considering the condition of affairs in Cuba, instantly destroyed.

However, it is wise to wait until the official report of the Court of Inquiry is filed with the Navy Department and made public. War should not be waged without just cause, but if the Spanish Government is responsible for the destruction of the Maine, and the United States declares war against Spain the justice of its cause cannot be disputed.

AN INFAMOUS MEASURE DEFEATED

The infamous bill introduced by Congressman Loud of California with the purpose of destroying the local press and excluding books, periodicals and other literature from the common people, was defeated by laying it upon the table.

The press of the country, particularly of the West, should remember Mr. Loud of California if he ever comes before the public again and convince him that his name and perhaps the effluvia arising from his dirty work and public record are his only pronounced qualifications and they are a disgrace to the State in which he claims residence. It is not probable that his bill would have ever passed the United States Senate, but the fact that he introduced it in the House and persistently advocated its passage should everlastingly damn him in a country which believes in free speech and the free expression through newspapers of the current happenings of the day.

The House Committee on Public Lands has decided to report favorably the bill introduced by Representative Shafroth of Colorado, ceding all the arid lands to the States in which they are located. Should the bill become a law all the non-mineral public lands in Nevada will be ceded to the State, as they are arid and cannot be made productive without irrigation. The bill reserves all mineral lands for the United States.

A Lieutenant of artillery has almost scared the life out of the Bostonians by telling them their city is open to attack from the sea, and that it is more likely to receive an attack in case of war with any maritime nation than any other seaport along the coast.

MYSTERY OF THE SEA

STORY OF A GHOSTLY MESSENGER
IN A GREEN SOUTHWESTER.

How Captain Benner Came Very Near Being Put In Irons by His Crew For Changing the Ship's Course—The Four Shipwrecked Men in a Boat.

At a dinner in Creole lodgings, in Jamaica, some three years ago, the conversation turned upon the subject of ghosts and apparitions. A person present quoted the words of Professor Proctor, "There may be some means of communication, under special conditions, between mind and mind at a distance, though no one may be able to explain how such communication is brought about." One of the guests present made a reference to a tale of a mysterious apparition at sea, adding:

"If you ever meet Captain Blank of the 'Blank line,' ask him to tell the story. The incidents happened to a relative of his. He can tell them better than I and will vouch for their truth."

A few days ago Captain Blank was found on board his steamer. He is not only a skillful seaman and navigator, but also a very courteous gentleman. Although about to sail, he took time to tell the following:

In the early thirties Captain Benner, granduncle of the narrator, commanded the brig Mohawk of New York, then engaged in the West Indian trade. After leaving St. Thomas, her last port of call on a voyage, the brig was steering a northwesterly course, homeward bound, beating up under short canvas against high winds and heavy seas following in the wake of a hurricane which had traversed the tropics five or six days before. Her captain, who had been some hours on deck, went below a midnight after directing the first officer, who was on watch, to keep the course then steered and to call him in case of any change for the worse in the weather. He lay down upon a sofa in the main cabin, but, as the brig's bell struck twice, became conscious of the figure of a man, wearing a green southwest, standing beside him in the dim light of the cabin lamp. Then he heard the words:

"Change your course to south-west, captain."

Captain Benner got up and went on deck, where he found that the weather had moderated and that the brig was carrying more sail and making better headway. He asked the mate on duty why he had sent down to call him, to which that officer replied that he had but done so. The captain, fancying that he had been dreaming, went back to the sofa, but was disturbed soon again by a knock from the man in the green southwest, who repeated his previous order and roused up the commander. The captain, now thoroughly aroused, jumped up and pursued the man to the fore-cabin, but saw no one until he had returned to his watch, who insisted he had not sent any messenger below.

Startled and perplexed, Captain Benner returned to the cabin, only to find the singular visitor reappear, to repeat the order to change the course to south-west, with the warning, "If you do not, it will soon be too late," and to see him disappear as before.

Although a cool headed seaman, fairly proof against superstitions, the captain was nevertheless deeply impressed by these happenings and determined to see what meaning was hidden in the order of his midnight visitor. Going on deck, he gave the necessary orders for the change in the ship's course to south-west. The officers of the brig were not only surprised but also indignant at this sudden and to them unreasonable change of course. The new course brought the vessel at a right angle to her proper direction and if persisted in would strand her on the coast of Santo Domingo. Meanwhile the weather had moderated still more, additional sail had been got upon the vessel, and she was being driven still farther from her destination.

Her impatient officers had finally determined to seize their captain and put him in irons, when, soon after day-break, the lookout forward reported some object dead ahead. As the vessel kept on it was made out to be a ship's boat. As it ranged ahead it was seen to contain four men lying under its thwart, one of whom wore a green southwest. The Mohawk was promptly hoisted to a boat lowered, and the castaways taken in. The castaways proved to be the captain and three men, the only survivors of the crew of a vessel which had gone down in the hurricane, and they had been drifting helplessly without food for five or six days. The green southwest was the property of the rescued captain. A few days later, when he had recovered sufficiently to be able to leave his berth, he was sitting one day in the main cabin of the brig with Captain Benner. He suddenly asked his host whether he believed in dreams.

"Since I have been here," he continued, "I have been thinking how familiar this cabin looks. I think that I have been here before. In the night before you picked me up I dreamed that I came to you here in this cabin and told you to change your course to south-west. The first time you took no notice of me, and I came the second time, in vain, but the third time you changed your course, and I woke to find your ship alongside of us."

Then Captain Benner, who had noticed the resemblance of the speaker to his mysterious visitor, told his own story of that night.

Captain Blank could not recall the name of the wrecked vessel, but said that all the facts were confirmed by the logbook of the Mohawk, even to the details of the intention of the officers of the brig to put their commander in irons. The story is an oft repeated one in Captain Blank's family and is well known in the locality from which he hails.—New York Sun.

Ignorance.

Two country men went into a hatter's to buy a hat. They were delighted with the sample, inside the crown of which was inserted a looking glass.

"What is the glass for?" said one of the men.

The other, impatient at such a display of rural ignorance, said: "What for? Why, for the man who buys the hat to see how it fits."—Pick Me Up.

Messages From the Sea.

A bottle dispatched from the steamship Guildhall on May 31, 1894, when in 46 degrees north, 81 degrees west, almost midway between Brest and Newfoundland, was picked up on Feb. 13, 1896, at Antigua, after a drift of about 4,600 miles. It had evidently passed close to the Azores, the Canary Islands and the Cape Verde on the way. Another, thrown overboard from the sloop Sapolo on July 20, 1892, traveled eastward toward the Azores, and thence, as in the previous instance, until it was recovered near Turk's island, north of Haiti, on Feb. 8, 1896, after a drift of nearly 6,000 miles.

A bottle message from the sailing ship St. Enoch is probably the most interesting of the 82 drifts shown on the United States chart. It was sent off when some 700 miles west of Sierra Leone, under the influence of the well known Guinea current, setting eastward on to the African land. The master of this vessel noted on the message that she had experienced an easterly current of 86 miles during the previous day. Hence there is reason to suppose that this messenger was swept eastward until some incident occurred to transfer it to a current setting in a westerly direction. Once on the latter route, however, it passed leisurely along through the passages of the Windward isles, escaping contact with any land, followed the trend of the Atlantic coast of North America till clear of Newfoundland, and thence onward to Totabrough Walls, Shetland islands, where it was found on March 20, 1896, after having accomplished a record drift of nearly 8,000 miles in less than 1,000 days.—Chambers' Journal.

Wild Life and the Senses.

I made bold to say to Dr. Nansen that thousands upon thousands of men who were not specially interested in arctic work had read his book with delight, and that to me the marvel was not that he could do what he did in the field, but that he could write such a book about his experiences.

"The best thing in it, to my notion," I said, "is your description of your dramatic meeting with Jackson on Franz-Josef Land, and the best part of that was your reference to the manner in which the wild man's sharpened senses discovered the fragment of the soap which the civilized European has used in his morning ablutions."

"It is really true," replied Dr. Nansen, "that I could smell that soap as plainly as if it had been a strong perfume. Johansen noted the same thing when he came up. In fact, for several days our sense of smell was wonderfully acute. As I approached Jackson's hut I thought I could smell everything it contained and give a sort of inventory of its stores without entering. In a day or two this acuteness wore off, and we became quite normal in that as well as in other respects. But I wonder if a man were to live wild for a few years if his sense of smell would not become quite as keen as that of an animal?"—Chicago Times-Herald.

Had Done What Was Owing.

A colored woman went to the pastor of her church the other day to complain of the conduct of her husband, who, she said, was a low down, worthless, trifling nigger. After listening to a long recital of the delinquencies of her neglectful spouse and her efforts to correct them the minister said, "Have you ever tried heaping coals of fire upon his head?" "No," was the reply, "but I done tried hot water."—Washington Letter in Chicago Record.

A Pertinent Query.

"Ah, yes," said the star, "I have been married for eight years!" "Continuously?" asked the critical one, but the query was deemed unworthy of reply.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

It is estimated that 1,200 tons of ostrich feathers have been exported from Cape Colony during the past 30 years, valued at $12,000,000.

Naming the Baby.

She was a young mother, and it was her first. It was the prettiest, the most intelligent—in fact, there never was such an infant. So she thought it should have a name which would distinguish it from all others. After a great deal of thinking she announced her decision.

"Papa," she said to the happy father, "I have thought of a name for the baby. We will call her Imogen."

Papa was a matter of fact man, who knew there was nothing in that baby different from most others, and he didn't wish to see his child saddled with a name that wouldn't fit in with other circumstances.

"Fancy her marrying a man named Snooks," he thought. "Imogen Snooks will sound nice, won't it? But if I say so she'll begin to cry and will insist upon it."

After a little reflection he thought of a plan.

"I think that's a lovely name, my dear!" he cried. "It was my first sweetheart's. She will take it as a compliment, and it will always remind me. Yes, that and your dear mother's name, Mary, are the best I know."

"I think, papa," she said after a pause, "we had better call her Mary, after my mother."

And the artful man chuckled to himself.—Sund Magazine.

CYANIDE POISONING.

Employees at the De La Mar Mills Succumbing To It.

With the cyanide process at De La Mar mills comes a dreaded and most fatal disease of cyanide poisoning and antimony, which is working sad havoc among the Dixie boys who have formed the main help at the De La Mar mills. A few months' work in the dust-laden mills performs its deadly mission. At first it affects the breath, which becomes very offensive, and the lungs become irritated by the antimony and poisoned by the cyanide, ulceration sets in, and then the work of the destroyer is short.

It is said that eighteen victims have been claimed by cyanide, three of whom are St. George boys. Lewis Conger, brother-in-law to Judge Francis L. Dagget, died Wednesday morning from the effects of the dreaded disease, and several St. George boys are now very ill.—Salt Lake Tribune.

The Comstock Visited by its Periodical Earthquake.

A severe shock of earthquake occurred Sunday morning on the Comstock at 7:35, and is said to be the severest that has visited the range for years. Exactly twelve hours later at 7:35 in the evening, three distinct tremors were felt, but they were light compared to the shake in the morning. The movement seemed to be from northeast to southwest and can better be described by comparing it to the jar felt from the falling of a heavy body or the collision of two large bodies. No damage resulted, but the people generally rushed out of doors and were badly frightened. The disturbance seems to have been entirely local as the shock was not felt at Carson or this place. As usual a number of theories are advanced regarding the phenomena in that locality, but they are purely speculative, electrical influences and force probably being the nearest correct.

It has been nearly a year now since Reno experienced a similar disturbance at intervals for several weeks which was also local, the adjacent towns in all directions being singularly free from the phenomena, except in two or three instances where the Comstock felt a slight tremor.

Called to the Old Home.

J. O. Stubbs and D. D. Stubbs of San Francisco passed through yesterday morning in a special car en route to Ashtand, Ohio, called East by the severe illness of their father. Their brother, Dr. J. E. Stubbs of the University, also received a telegram that it was doubtful whether their father would survive Sunday night. The Doctor accompanied his brothers on their sad journey to the old home. It is earnestly hoped that they will reach the bedside of their aged parent in time, but it was feared that they would be too late. He is very old and he has been in poor health for quite a long time and the chances for his recovery are very slight.

Hard to Please.

A few days ago a capitalist of Reno instructed his agent to dun a man by the name of Smith in a California town. It seems that the capitalist had two Smiths on his list of debtors, but the agent did not know this. He wrote a directed and in a day or two received a remittance of $100. The capitalist had not been informed of the payment so he again told his agent to dun Smith. The agent replied, "Why I have and he sent a hundred dollars." "Which one did you dun?" asked the capitalist. He was informed, when he immediately flew into a towering rage and said, Oh! h—l you dunned the wrong Smith.

Ready for the Field.

An Eastern dispatch says that the Uniform Rank, Knights of Pythias, of Plainfield, N. J., has received a communication from General Reese of Phillipsburg, the officer in command of the New Jersey Knights, requesting that the members hold themselves in readiness for service in the event of war with Spain. The order calls for a detailed statement of the number of men available for service. The organization, in case of hostilities with a foreign power, might be called into service as a reserve force, auxiliary to the regular army and the militia. It has an available force of 60,000 well drilled men.

California Cattle Dying.

A practical illustration of the effects of the protracted drought in California is afforded in the following extract from a dispatch to the San Francisco Chronicle from Salinas, Cal.: "A few days ago twelve carloads of cattle belonging to Henry Miller passed through here enroute to Miller's ranch near Gilroy, where they will be fed on beet pulp. When the train reached Castroville only twenty were all that were able to stand, the others are lying on the bottom of the cars. This shipment is all that were able to stand the trip out of a herd of 3000.

The Government Will Try an Experiment.

The government is going into the cattle dipping business in earnest. Dr. Salmon of the Bureau of Animal Industry was at the Fort Worth Convention, and assured the cowmen that the government was going to give the subject careful investigation and experiment. Thousands of cattle will be dipped and sent north and the result noted. If it is a success, dipping stations will be established along the quarantine line, and the great Texas fever problem will have been solved forever.—Denver Stockman.

THE MONTGOMERY BEACHED.

Believed That She is Not Safe to Haul into Harbor.

James Healy, of Boston, an electrician, on board the cruiser Montgomery wrote the following from Key West to Philip Connell of that city:

"We had orders to take a pilot going into every Spanish port. Now, out of these four ports that we entered the pilot ran us high and dry; and the last time we never would have got off but for a Ward Line steamer. At first we thought it was only an accident, but events have set us thinking in a different way now. We know beyond a doubt that the Maine was blown up from the outside, and we will have war."
